CENTENARY COMMITTEE GETS STATE CHARTER

Application for a charter for the Memphis and Shelby County Centenary Celebration, Inc., were filed with the county register Saturday by E. B. Riewer in behalf of the celebration's executive committee. The incorporators were B. A. Bogy, executive chairman; James H. Malone, H. R. Cheara, Walk C. Jones and George B. Coleman. The charter sets forth that the purpose of the organization is "to arrange for and carry out a public celebration of the centennial anniversary of the founding of the city and the establishment of the county: the promotion of commerce, trade, agriculture, horticulture, mechanical aris, historical knowledge and education, and the arousing of public interest" in local "trade facilities, educational advantages and historical matters."

Acceptance of the charter as drawn was acknowledged by members of the executive committee at a meeting in the celebration headquarters, 24 North Second street, late Priday, when organization for the celebration was thoroughly discussed and steps taken to put the movement actually on foot.

The celebration is scheduled for May 21-22-two days of practically unlimited festivities, the nature of which has not been determined. some are in attendance now and some are yet to go.

This new policy instituted for in-ence and began an effort to restore Poiand. But they were at once assailed, both by the Germans and by the Bolsheviks, they were also attacked to the south by the Ukranians, with whom they have had an age-long quarrel over Lemburg, and finally there arrived a dispute between the Bohemians and the Poles about Upper Silesia.

Recognizing that Poland was, after all, the cornerstone of the new European system, the most important detail in the program of liberating the ensiaved people, it will be seen how great has been the apprehension in Paris over the condition in Poland. At the present hour, the Bolsheviks hold Vilna, the Ukranians are bombarding Lemburg, and the Germans were invading Posen when the terms of the new armistice were served upon them.

At bottom the Polish situation is part of the great problem as to whether Germany shall be able again to attack Europe, not alone with her own strength, but with the unwilling aid of millions of subject peoples. In 1914, some 63,000,000 of Germans in Germany holding 7,000,000 Alsatians, Poles and Danes, and 22,000,000 of Germans and Hungarians in Austria holding 30,000,000 Slavs and Latins, attacked France and Russia. Thus Germany and Austria together were able to employ against France and Russia the military resources of 37,000,000 subject people, a population nearly as great as that of France, and but for these resources Germany would have been beaten in the first two years of the war by Russia and France.

about Germany. Three months after Germany surrendered, we have been still going on from week to week and month to month, permitting Germany to regain her strength, her courage and return to her old pathways, while allied morale has been weakening. It has been discovered at last that it was not enough to say to the Poles, "Rise from the tomb of two centuries of slavery and become at once a united nation," when all the forces of bothe and Bolshevik were combined to prevent this thing; and at last something has been done for Poland.

But it is a fact that can not be too frequently emphasized that protraction of peace negotiations, however inescapable, is producing a condition of unrest in the minds of the victorious nations, leading to a weakening of their strength at precisely the moment when the German enemy, having passed through a peried of dejection and depression, but finding herself with her cities undestroyed and her factories undisturbed, is daily and hourly improving her morale.

The great hope must be now that, having finished with the preliminary draft of the league of nations, and having taken a trea. If short step in the matter of Poland, the peace conference will now pass from the domain of Utopia to the area of Mitteleurops. One can not too frequently emphasize the fact that of itself the league of nations is an othing, that words in a covenant have no power or force of themselves. If the league of nations is a group of countries prepared to use their collective resources to restore health to Europe by eliminating each of the open sores which were subject nationalities, if the league of nations is an alliance of liberal powers prepared to put the weight of its artiliery as well as its words behind those small peoples whom it is summoning to national existence, then, and in that measure, it is something, but not otherwise.

We have discovered clearly that while it is possible to bid the Bolsheviki to rwise.

We have discovered clearly that while to is possible to bid the Bolsheviki to to to Prinkipo and to invite the Poles to lift themselves by their bootstraps to lift clearly existence and bestow fego to Prinkipo and to invite the Poles to lift themselves by their bootstraps into national existence and bestow felicitous words on the Czecho-Slovaka, the result is not progress toward peace, but an ever-growing extension of the area of anarchy. Outside of Europe we have regognized this fact in principle by creating mandatories for Asia Minor and Central Africa; but it is utter absurdity to create mandatories in Africa and abandon Poland, Rumanna and Jugo-Slavia to their own fate.

It is perfectly clear that if we can create a Poland of 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 people, and that if the weight of the league of nations is sufficient to give that state time to order itself, time to become a country at once suppressing Boishevism within and repulsing invasion at its frontiers, at no distant time one more considerable self-sustaining nation will be added to league of nations with so much additional force to aid in application of the principles of the league. But in Poland, in Jugo-Slavia, perhaps in Bohemia, there will be an intermediate period between verbal liberational existence, and in that period it will require the force of the league of nations to protect the new Poland, and the same is true in many other countries. Prime Minister Hughes, of Australia, said a true word recently when he pointed out that the league of nations, of itself a document, changed nothing and emphasized the peril that would flow from the belief that a mere collection of words in a covenant would transform the face of the world. The and emprasized the peril that would flow from the belief that a mere collection of words in a covenant would transform the face of the world. The league of nations cannot delegate to individuals powers the duty of becoming mandatories for the respective states which are to be created at Paris and as the case of Poland has proved, if the allied powers which are to constitute the league of nations are not prepared to use force, no words will prevail.

For three menths we have been using words with the Germans in the matter of Poland, but only now have we told them that unless they desisted on their eastern frontier we should put in motion our armies along the Rhine. Confronted with this statement the Germans will permit the creation of Poland, of Bohemia, but not otherwise. Will the lesson, too, be lost? (Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

PRINCESS PAT BIDS BATTALION FAREWELL

LONDON (via Montreal), Feb, 22,— Princess Patricia of Connaught, yeaterday bade farewell to the famous battalion of Canadian light infantry which bears her name, of which she is colonel-in-chief, and is known
through the world as the "Princess Pats."

The battalion was inspected by the princess at the Canadian camp at Bramshott. The men had with them the colors which the princess had worked with her own hands. These colors were presented to them when they left Ottawa for France and the soldiers carried them through many engagements during the war.

After inspecting and addressing the men the princess placed a laurel wreath in metal on the colors. On this was inscribed, "To the Princess Patricia's Light Infantry from the Colonel-in-Chief, in recognition of their heroic service in the great war
of 1914-18."
